Summary: Casey Anthony, who was accused of murdering her daughter, allegedly paid her lawyer with sex.

A private investigator said that a then-broke Casey Anthony paid her lawyer with sex! On Tuesday, Radar Online released sworn testimony from Dominic Casey, who was hired by Anthony's lawyer Jose Baez in 2008. P.I. Casey was asked in January to testify in Anthony's Chapter 7 bankruptcy case.

One bombshell claim against the accused-killer allegedly occurred on Sept. 5, 2008. The investigator said Baez had scheduled a TV interview for Anthony, but she didn't want to do it. In the deposition, the investigator said Baez called the network to cancel and then said to Anthony, "You now owe me three blowjobs."

The quid-pro-quo misconduct "escalated," according to P.I. Casey. He said that in September 2008, he saw a naked Anthony run from Baez's office after he showed up there unannounced. The investigator told her not to continue with that behavior, and she allegedly responded that she had to do what Baez said because she had no money.

The investigator reminded Anthony that Baez had already made money off of her by selling her pictures to the media.

In 2011, Anthony was found not guilty of murdering her baby daughter, Caylee, after a two-month trial that riveted the nation. Although she was set free, she struggled in the real world and eventually filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy.

Anthony has since started her own photography business in Florida, Radar reports.
