

Marvin Sparrow Disbarred for Sexual Assault

Summary: North Carolina attorney Marvin Sparrow pled guilty to touching female clients inappropriately, resulting in his disbarment.

Western North Carolina attorney Marvin Sparrow has been disbarred after sexual assault charges were raised against him. Sparrow pled guilty to the assault charges earlier this year.

The Rutherford County Sheriff's Office was alerted on August 2015 of Sparrow's conduct when a woman claimed she had been inappropriately touched by her lawyer, Sparrow, in his office. The Sheriff's Office passed the complaint to the State Bureau of Investigations, who then looked into the actions of the Rutherford County lawyer.

By September 2015, his law license was suspended. For two years, they investigated Sparrow. During that time, two more women came forward with complaints against him. One woman claimed that she had been an inmate at the Rutherford County Detention Center when he touched her inappropriately. The other woman said she had been at the courthouse when he touched her.

Sparrow eventually pleaded guilty to three misdemeanor charges of assault in 2017. His sentence was 120 days in prison but it was suspended for just 120 days of community service. He surrendered his license and was disbarred soon after.

His LinkedIn account claims that he graduated from North Carolina Central University School of Law. He has apparently had his own law office since 2002.

Do you think Sparrow should have served some time behind bars? Tell us in the comments below.

To learn more about disbarred attorneys, read these articles:

- Devin Thomas Disbarred for Crack Cocaine Addiction
- Florida State Bar Wants Bernardo Roman III Permanently Disbarred
- Disbarred Attorney Louis Uvino Acted as Practicing Lawyer to Steal from another Client

Cover Photo: aviano.af.mil

Sparrow Photo: linkedin.com