

Greenberg Traurig Bolsters NJ Presence with Former Prosecutor and Leading Gibbons Practice Leader

Greenberg Traurig, a prominent law firm with a presence in over 40 locations worldwide, has announced that it has hired Kevin Walsh, a former practice leader from Gibbons, to join its team as a shareholder in New Jersey. Walsh, who previously co-chaired Gibbons' government and regulatory affairs group, will be based in Greenberg Traurig's Florham Park office, where he will be a part of the firm's white-collar defense and special investigations and litigation practices.

As part of his role, Walsh will advise clients on criminal and regulatory government investigations, white-collar defense, and general business litigation. He will also bring extensive experience in the education sector. He has worked with clients on Title IX investigations, employee discrimination claims, and the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA).

Walsh's career spans several years, during which time he has held several key positions in the legal industry. Before joining Greenberg Traurig, he was the acting general counsel for Seton Hall University and served as an assistant U.S. attorney in New Jersey. His wealth of experience makes him a valuable addition to Greenberg Traurig's team, particularly as the firm seeks to expand its presence in the state.

According to a statement issued by Greenberg Traurig, Walsh's decision to join the firm was driven, in part, by its roster of former federal prosecutors. The firm's team includes several former U.S. attorneys who bring a wealth of experience in criminal and civil matters. Walsh will undoubtedly benefit from the expertise of these individuals, renowned for their skill in handling complex legal cases.
