

Jayna Rust's Journey to Partnership at Thompson Coburn Fueled by Advocacy and Dedication

Thompson Coburn's Jayna Rust: Navigating the Path to Partnership with Dedication and Advocacy

Jayna Rust, a government contracts partner at Thompson Coburn, was recently featured in Law.com's esteemed "How I Made It" series. The article delves into Jayna's journey from being a summer associate to becoming a partner at one of the country's leading law firms. Her insights and experiences shed light on the firm's commitment to fostering talent and providing opportunities for growth.

Jayna's connection with Thompson Coburn began a decade ago when she joined the firm as a summer associate during law school. Aspiring to work in a firm dedicated to government contracts, Jayna conducted thorough research and discovered that Thompson Coburn possessed the expertise she sought. Impressed by the firm's attorneys and their commitment to the practice area, Jayna accepted a full-time offer and embarked on her professional journey with Thompson Coburn.

One aspect that set Jayna apart during her tenure as an associate was her active involvement in business development activities. She understood the importance of establishing a presence and showcasing her expertise through writing articles, delivering presentations, and building a strong professional network. This proactive approach allowed her to contribute significantly to the firm's growth and further solidified her position as a rising legal professional within the government contracts group.

Jayna attributes much of her success to the invaluable support and mentorship she received from the firm's leadership. Throughout her career, she had advocates within the government contracts group and other key figures within Thompson Coburn who championed her talents and potential. Their unwavering support and advocacy played a crucial role in propelling her towards partnership consideration.
