

Supreme Court Opinion References ND Law Professors Samuel Bray and Paul Miller

Justice Neil M. Gorsuch of the U.S. Supreme Court recently made notable citations to the work of two esteemed Notre Dame Law School faculty members. In his concurrence for the case of United States v. Texas, which pertained to the administration's guidance for Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), Gorsuch included references to the scholarly contributions of these legal experts. The Supreme Court, with an 8-1 majority, ruled that a U.S. District Court judge in Texas did not possess the jurisdiction to preside over a lawsuit concerning

The concurrence by Justice Gorsuch specifically highlighted a paper titled "Getting into Equity," which was co-authored by Samuel Bray, the John N. Matthews Professor of Law, and Paul Miller, the Associate Dean for International & Comparative Law. This paper, published in the prestigious Notre Dame Law Review in 2022, garnered recognition from Gorsuch, demonstrating the scholarly prowess of the Notre Dame Law School faculty.

Furthermore, Justice Gorsuch referenced Bray's paper entitled "Multiple Chancellors: Reforming the National Injunction," which was published in the esteemed Harvard Law Review in 2017. Notably, this particular paper received widespread recognition and praise for its analysis of the Supreme Court's role in federalism.

Interestingly, this marks the second consecutive week in which Justice Gorsuch has cited the scholarship of faculty members from the Notre Dame Law School. In a series of three separate opinions issued on June 15, Gorsuch acknowledged the contributions of three faculty members. This ongoing recognition further solidifies the reputation and influence of the Notre Dame Law School within the legal community.

Connect with qualified, experienced attorneys by submitting your job openings with BCG Attorney Search.

The citations made by Justice Gorsuch underscore the significance and influence of academic research within the realm of legal decision-making. By referencing scholarly papers authored by Bray and Miller, Gorsuch acknowledges the expertise provided by these esteemed professors.

Including these citations within a Supreme Court opinion also elevates the visibility and recognition of the Notre Dame Law School and its faculty. It showcases the institution's commitment to producing high-quality legal scholarship and its contribution to the development of legal principles and influences judicial decision-making.

Overall, the recognition bestowed upon Samuel Bray and Paul Miller by Justice Gorsuch in his concurrence emphasizes the importance of academic research and its impact on the legal system's highest echelons. It also serves as a testament to the legal scholarship produced by the faculty members at the Notre Dame Law School, solidifying their standing as influential voices within the field of law.

Don't be a silent ninja! Drop a comment and let your opinion shine.